

Sales & Market Strategy

March 19 – 31, 2026

PART 1 — YOUR FULL TOOLKIT (Mar 19 – 22)

01

Everything You Can Do — Full Inventory

Write down every professional capability you have. Not just 'sales' — everything. Negotiation, deal structuring, brand strategy, media buying, copywriting, event production, community building, finance, tech, public speaking, network activation. Include things you have done once and know you are good at. We may not know everything you bring to this yet — this is the list that tells us.

Separate what you enjoy from what you are merely good at. Both matter, but differently.

02

Your Network — Who You Know and In What World

Map your professional network loosely: investors, property owners, brand managers, media contacts, event promoters, hospitality operators, agencies, influencers, anyone who could be a client, a partner, or a door-opener. For each person or category: what world are they in, and how strong is the relationship? This network has commercial value — it needs to exist as a document.

A warm introduction from you is worth more than a cold outreach from anyone else.

03

The Things You Have Pulled Off That Surprised People

What have you done professionally that others said was unlikely or too ambitious — and you did it anyway? What do people come to you for that you have never formally offered? What can you do that is not obvious from your job title? Write three or four of these. They may shape parts of what MOF offers that we have not yet thought of.

These are not stories to impress — they are real capabilities we should be building around.

04

How You Sell — Your Natural Method

Describe how you actually close a deal or bring someone on board. What is your approach to a first meeting? How do you build trust fast? How do you handle price resistance? What is your follow-up method? Write this in your own words — not a textbook version. What do you actually do?

CHECKPOINT CALLS

Call 1 · Tue Mar 25 Toolkit review — what does F bring that changes what MOF can offer?

05

Who Are the Real Buyers?

Based on your experience: who would actually pay for what we are building? Property owners with empty or underperforming space? First-time entrepreneurs? Investors who own assets but lack operations? Existing locations that are stuck? For each type: how urgently do they need us, how easy are they to reach, and how likely are they to pay properly? Rank them.

The most urgent buyer and the easiest to reach are not always the same person.

06

What Stops Them From Solving This Themselves?

For each buyer type you identified: what is the real reason they have not already fixed their problem? Is it money? Fear? Not knowing where to start? Bad past experiences? No trusted partner? Understanding the blocker is more useful than understanding the desire — it tells you exactly what the pitch needs to address.

07

What Does the Competition Actually Offer?

Look at what else exists in this space: gastro consultants, brand agencies, franchise systems, full-service hospitality studios. What do they offer, what do they charge, and where do they consistently fall short? Keep it short — one page. The goal is to find the gap that only MOF can credibly fill.

The gap is usually not about services. It is about proof, trust, and who has real skin in the game.

08

Two or Three Ways We Could Package What We Offer

Based on what O is building and what M can produce — and what buyers actually need — write two or three ideas for how we could structure our offer. Not final. Not priced yet. Just: here is one way to package this, here is another. What does each one solve for the client, and who is each one for?

No packaging decision gets made alone. Bring these to Call 2 so we react together.

09

Your Lane — What Only You Do

After seeing what O has built and what M can produce: define clearly what belongs to you. What are the sales and commercial tasks that need your specific skill set — that O and M cannot do as well? Write it out. This is not about territory. It is about making sure we do not waste each other's time and that the things only you can do actually get done.

10

First Outreach — Five Real Names

Write down five real people or organisations outside of O's existing network who could be potential clients for MOF. Not hypothetical profiles — actual names. For each: what world are they in, why would they need us, and how would you approach them? One short outreach message — the kind you would actually send, not a template.

Five warm, thoughtful outreaches beat fifty cold emails every time at this stage.

DELIVERABLES

✓ Full skills and capability inventory	Mar 22
✓ Network map — people, industries, relationship strength	Mar 22
✓ 3–4 surprising capabilities or past wins	Mar 23
✓ Your personal sales method — written	Mar 24
✓ Buyer types ranked by urgency and reachability	Mar 25
✓ Buyer blocker analysis per segment	Mar 26
✓ Competitor landscape — one page	Mar 26
✓ 2–3 packaging ideas (rough, not final)	Mar 27