Content & Creative Production

March 19 – 31, 2026

PART 1 — CAPABILITY MAP (Mar 19 – 22)

01

Everything You Can Deliver — and How Fast

Write a complete list of every creative service you can produce yourself, right now, with your current equipment and skills. Photography, video, reels, drone, web builds, brand identity, logo, social templates, print, content strategy — anything. For each: realistic turnaround time and honest quality level. This is not a price list yet. It is an honest inventory.

Include things you have done once and know you could do again. Do not undersell.

02

Your Creative Network — Who You Can Call

List the photographers, videographers, graphic designers, motion designers, copywriters, and other creatives you actually know and could bring in on a project. For each person: what they are great at, how fast they work, and how reliable they are. This roster is MOF's extended production capacity. It needs to exist as a document.

A name and a strong skill beats a long list of maybes.

What a Gastro Brand Actually Needs Visually

Based on what you know about hospitality and food brands — and what you see O working with — what does a gastro location need to look credible and attractive to customers? Think through every touchpoint: the sign above the door, the menu, the Instagram feed, the Google listing, a reel that actually makes someone want to come in. Write this as a checklist of the visual assets every location needs as a minimum.

This becomes the brief template for every client engagement.

04

What a Sales Pitch Needs From You

Think about the moment F is sitting across from a potential client. What does he need from you to close that conversation? A deck? A showreel? A portfolio PDF? A live website example? A mood board? Write down everything a sales conversation needs visually — and be realistic about what you can have ready before April.

CHECKPOINT CALLS

Call 1 · Tue Mar 25 Capability map review — what can we offer, what do we need to source?

05

Visual References — MOF's Taste Level

Collect 10–15 brand references that represent the aesthetic direction you think MOF should own. Not all gastro — look at premium retail, boutique hospitality, luxury food packaging, independent studios. Group them by feeling: warm and intimate, bold and urban, minimal and premium. This library becomes the shared taste reference for everything we produce.

Quality over quantity. 10 references you believe in are worth more than 30 collected quickly.

06

Two Brand Directions for MOF Itself

Sketch or mock up two distinct visual directions for the MOF Ventures brand. These do not need to be finished — they need to be different enough that we can pick one and react. Think about: what name or naming territory feels right, what the logo could be, what the overall tone communicates. Bring both to Call 2 so we can decide together.

One safe direction, one more unexpected. The unexpected one is usually right.

One Mock Content Package — As If We Were Shooting Tomorrow

Pick one of O's locations and build a prototype of what a full content package would look like for that place. What photos would you take? What would the reel show? What would the social templates look like? You do not need to shoot anything yet — just show what the output would be if we were briefed and ready. One page, visual.

Website Skeleton — MOF Ventures

Once the brand direction is agreed on Call 2: build the skeleton of the MOF website. Structure: who we are, what we do, proof (placeholder for case studies), contact. Use Framer, Webflow, or whatever you can move fastest in. Clean and fast is the goal — it does not need to be finished, it needs to be credible enough to show a potential client.

09

Shot List for All Five April Locations

Prepare a detailed shot list for each of the five locations we are visiting in April. What exactly do you need to capture to build a strong case study? Hero shots, food, interior, atmosphere, team, before/after angles where relevant. The better this list is, the more efficiently we shoot on the day.

Think about what the website needs, what F needs for pitching, and what O can show future clients.

Two Social Templates — Reusable Per Location

Build two base social media templates — one feed post format, one story format — that can be recoloured and adapted for any location. These go into every client starter pack. Keep them clean, flexible, and fast to customise.
